

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

Was it Santa Claus? Or Was it der Captain?

FOXY GRANDPA

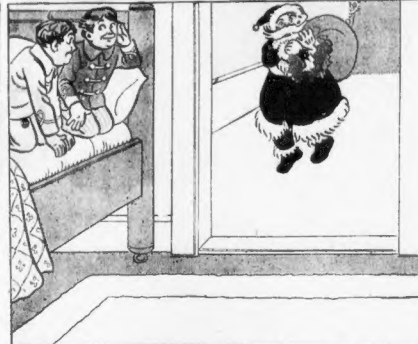

HE PREPARES A CHRISTMAS TREAT FOR THE BOYS, BUT THEY TRY TO SPOIL IT

1. GRANDPA: "Now, Michael, when the clock strikes twelve you are to put on this wig and beard and slip into the boys' room with the bag. We will try and have a little fun with them."

2. GRANDPA: "Here, boys, it's late. Get to bed, and perhaps Santa Claus may make you a visit."

3. BOYS: "Oh, say, just as if we didn't know Grandpa is our Santa Claus. Well, we will give him a hearty reception!"

4. BOYS: "Hurrah for Santa Claus! Oh, how we do love you, Santa Claus! Dear old Santa Claus!"

5. BOYS: "Oh, yes, we know you, Santa Claus, dear. We are delighted to see you."

6. GRANDPA: "Hello, boys. What's all this noise about? How dare you detain Santa Claus? Let him go this minute!"

1. CHARLEY ONTHESPOUT: "Why, Leander, you are the very man I wanted to see. Just look at this watch. What do you think of that for a Christmas present?"

2. LEANDER: "Why, Charley, it's a BEAUTY! Where did you get it? By Jove, I wish I had one like it. You certainly are in luck, old man." CHARLEY: "Look on the inside of the case."

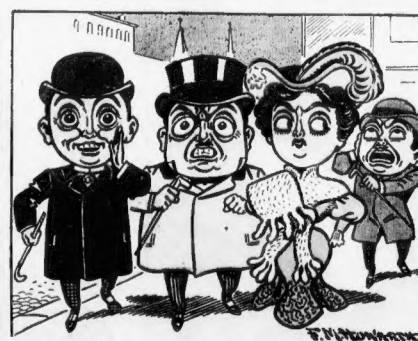

3. LEANDER: "W-H-A-T! You have Lulu's portrait on the inside of the case? YOU carry around the picture of my affianced bride in your watch? Ye gods! I'll not stand for it! FIVE!" CHARLEY: "But, Leander!"

4. LEANDER: "There's no 'buts' about this! Ye gods! Another man having the picture of my fiancée in his watch! THERE! I'll crush it to atoms, so matter what the consequence! I'll assert myself, I will!" CHARLEY: "Leander! Leander! LEANDER!"

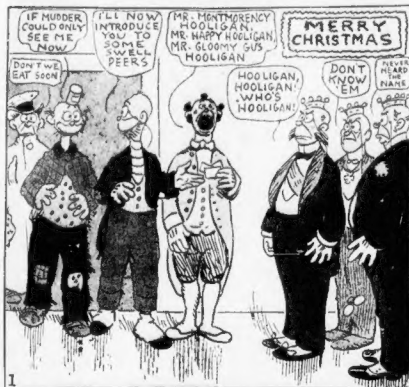

5. LULU: "Why, what does this mean, Leander? What is the matter, Charley?" CHARLEY: "Why, I just showed Leander the watch with your portrait in your father commissioned me to get for him to present to Leander as a Christmas gift, and—well, there it lies, in a thousand bits on the sidewalk."

6. LULU: "NO! I'll NOT listen to you. The idea of your daring to place a two-hundred-dollar watch! If you had looked you would have seen your monogram on it. I don't care what you thought. BRUTE!" POPPER: "The jealous idiot! Well, what he gets for old gold will be MY Christmas present to HIM." LEANDER: "Ye gods! A Merry Christmas! OH, YES!"

The Nihilist Shadow That Is Always Present.

IN the Imperial Palace of Tsarsko Selo the morning, for a little sleep. He challenges every one who appears Christmas approaches, the trembling coaches, except the Czar, the Czar's by turns the happiest and most sorrowful and the worst. Every day the bridge of packages of costly gifts for the infant heir to the Russian throne, to remind Nicholas at once that he has a son, and he trembles with the joy of half a trillion of prayers answered. The next moment he trembles with dread over the discovery of some new plot against his life, or with chagrin at news of some fresh disaster to his army in the far East.

"We will go to Moscow!" "No, no, your Imperial Highness! There Japanese ships, and houses and silver fore- are hidden for the trample to weaken us as an to launch the Imperial train to destruction." The trembling Czar will do this, he will do that, he will do something else—but always there is some ghastly reason why he should do nothing.

What may not happen between now and the Russian Christmas? That day is still three weeks distant—January 8 on our calendar corresponding to December 25 on the Russian calendar. But at enough costly toys for little Alexis have arrived to adorn a good-sized Christmas bazaar. They have come from the King and Queen of England, from the German Emperor and Empress, from the royal families of Spain, Portugal, Austria and Italy.

Little Alexis's few sisters, the Grand Duchesses Olga, Tatiana, Maria and Anna, are represented by the most beautiful cups, spoons, forks and other tableware that the future Czar cannot possibly manipulate for two or three years.

The Czarina's gifts are the most valuable of all. There are balls and retines and such other simple little toys, all charming in design, and beautifully carved and jeweled, as well as actually afford amusement for Alexis by the time he is a year old.

In her great and unexpected joy at last giving to her husband's country a future ruler, the Czarina's happiness is almost without alloy this Christmas. Only a case the Czar to tremble in the midst of stroke, reach her ears.

Christmas presents for little Alexis continue to arrive, and by other messengers a continuous rainfall of fresh disasters. An animal was blown up at a sacrifice of ammunition on which the Czar's soldiers were depending. At this time, when all should be "Peace on earth, good will toward men," the Czar trembles, too, lest the same fearful hand that forever threatens him should run him of the little heir who has in his cradle, watched over by the giants, armed Cossack, Zimla. Wrenched hour by hour by these conflicting emotions, it seems wonderful that the ruler of all the Russias can avoid this Christmas shuddering him under guard in his own palace, heir of the last remnant of his reason.

So little from half the royalties of Europe serve for the future Czar, the child of a little more than four months the blinking young man is held in his hand a baby's rattle. If they should show to him the belated King's gift of a silver model of the Imperial stable, with the silver horses in it, wouldn't carriage, groom and stable boys, he would turn from it to admire Zimla's pretty bottom.

The Rising Wave of Religious Revival Which is Sweeping Over All England and the Impressive Preaching and Wonderful Claims of Father Ignatius.

Father Ignatius.

A REMARKABLE revival of religious feeling is widely spreading throughout the Christian world in being noted in connection with the declaration of Father Ignatius, the Episcopal Monk, that, as the agent of the Almighty, he has performed the miracle of raising the dead.

It cannot be said that this is due to the vastness caused by the widely published miraculous instances related in the Baroness de Harcourt's "Life of Father Ignatius," for this rapidly spreading revival started in Lancashire early in September, before the publication of this sensational yet almost convincing volume, while in many parts of rural England, where religious enthusiasm is now greater than has been known for many years, the people have yet to learn that such a person as Father Ignatius exists.

The Lancashire revival was started by the Rev. Benham A. Terry and Charles M. Alexander, of Chicago, U. S. A., in September. These evangelists found all classes of people in an emotional state which rendered them wonderfully susceptible to the influence of their exhortations. It was only necessary to start the exercises when individuals and groups throughout the audience would throw themselves upon their knees, and presently nearly all present would be praying and singing with a fervor amounting almost to hysteria.

All through Wales the country is ringing with religious revivals. Meetings are being held on week days as well as on Sundays. They begin early in the evening and often do not end until nearly dawn. In the more fervent meetings are held even in working hours. Drunkenness and carousing are almost unknown, and the public houses are threatened with ruin.

The wave of new religious feeling has spread in London, where the arrival of Evan Roberts, whose name within six weeks has grown familiar through the United Kingdom, is eagerly awaited. This man, a Welsh miner, twenty-six years old, has risen above all other religious leaders in Wales. He goes from place to place, remaining a few days in each, sometimes spending whole days and nights praying and singing, without sleeping and hardly partaking of food.

A GREAT RELIGIOUS AWAKENING.

An extraordinary indication is the loss of interest in the football season, which usually absorbs the whole country at this time of year. Many of the best players have refused to engage in big match games, which have had to be called off.

These independent signs of a great religious awakening have attracted all the more attention to the declaration of Father Ignatius that he has carried the same power over the sick and over the dead, as that which made the leper whole and raised the daughter of Jairus from the dead at the command of the savior. Many are finding deep significance in the fact that the awakened, and Father Ignatius's announcement of his miraculous powers come practically at the same time as though they were intended to support each other, with the result of a universal Christian protest against the materialistic tendencies of this age.

It is astonishing how few there are who seek at the claims of Father Ignatius, or across him of miracles. The former tireless worker in the London slums who wears the garb of a Dominican monk and sends forth his thunderbolts for the old faith from the abbey he has founded in the mountains of Wales, seems to be respected like another savant, whom he resembles in features as well as in his fiery denunciations of the Godless.

Now, when he publicly lays claim to the power which enabled him to raise a young woman from the dead more than thirty years ago, Father Ignatius, at the age of seventy, leads a life of comparative severity as the "Episcopal Monk" Llanthony Abbey. He has explained to interviewers that he maintained silence on these matters all these years on the advice of his old confessor, the Prior, of London, who feared that knowledge of the power given him might cause him to be proud and result in his withdrawal.

"What now," says Father Ignatius, "I feel that we have fallen upon such days of doubt and evil that it is my duty to give my witness and testimony to these things."

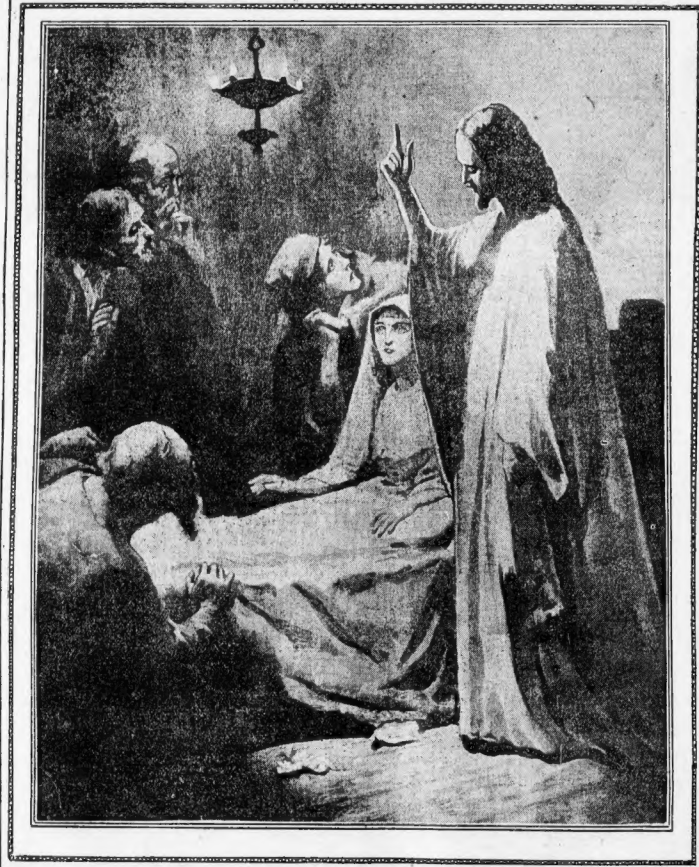

Let his published biography, containing the first descriptions of these miracles, should be received with skepticism, Father Ignatius contributed the following in the course of a preface over his signature:

FOR THE LORD'S GLORY, BY HIS WILL.

"As to the supernatural events I desire to say that, whether the reader believes the statements regarding them or does not believe them, it is no concern of mine. I simply give them to the author (of the biography) because I believe it is our Lord's will and for His glory that I should do so. People will believe them or not, as they are taught of God. I do not know how to prove or disprove these things, which at all events I myself regard as 'wonderful works of God.' The time has come to give my witness respecting them, and the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ knoweth that I do not."

For forty years the "Episcopal Monk" Llanthony Abbey, a famous personality in England. He had followed tirelessly in the slums of London, and after donating his monk's garb as a mission worker, had been stoned by a mob of Protestants, who denounced him as a Papist. He had been praised and rebuked from pulpits, and illustrated newspapers had caricatured him. It was natural that the statements published by his biographer should cause him to be besieged by his Wales retreat by interviewers demanding that he, the chief actor, describe these alleged supernatural events in his own words.

In his reply Ignatius readily complied, did so calmly and emphatically, and in concluding nothing for himself, declaring that he was merely with a fervent through whom the Almighty manifested himself. The following is his own account, word for word:

The Raising of Jairus's Daughter.

From the Famous Painting by Gertie.

"When quite a young man I realized, and Dr. Pusey, my confessor, knew that the spirit of God had taken possession of me and ordered me to heal the sick and raise the dead to life again."

"In 1862, when I was with my fellow worker, Mr. Redman, in London, a woman earnestly feeling God's command upon me, I rose up, charged my friend with a pill of the true cross with him, and we both set forth on our errand of mercy. On reaching the house we found the girl had been dead two hours and the body was already disposed for burial."

"Directed by an involuntary impulse, I took the relic and laid it on the heart of the corpse, exclaiming:

"Be the name of our Father! I say unto thee arise."

"Slowly and stiffly the corpse arose."

"Redman cried out: 'What have you done?'"

"I have done nothing," I answered. "The Lord hath done it."

"I believe Redman's brother is still alive and he can testify to the truth. I have never spoken of this wonder until now, when it is for the glory of God that I should be believed."

"A messenger, then, at Plymouth, twenty afterwards, an evil mother refused to allow her daughter to be baptized. I warned her that God's curse would fall on her if she persisted. She was obstinate. Suddenly without warning, her fourteen-year-old daughter was stricken with illness."

"The doctors could never explain the origin of the affliction: it baffled their science. It was the act of God."

"There have been other instances, but two will suffice, because I believe there are means of substantiating them. A stricken mother sent for me not long ago to secure her son. When I came death drew near. We always have Lourdes water at the abbey, though the nature of the water is immaterial. I said:

"I feel our Lord intends I shall raise this poor boy by the power of His name."

"Instantly the boy arose perfectly cured, and next day he walked five miles from his house to mine, bringing me a gift of flowers. That boy's mother still lives close to Llanthony; I will ask her if she is willing to give evidence."

"When Llanthony Abbey was being built a great block of masonry crashed to death one workman. The workmen at all saw of the accident. I grasped a little dish of Lourdes water and reached the spot where the man lay, motionless but breathing, and his fellows standing hurried around the body."

"I felt the Divine command upon me. I commanded him to arise in the name of the Lord. The man walked home to his lodgings without once a waking upon him. There is certainly no witness of that event living."

These words were uttered in calm, earnest tones that showed the speaker's conviction of their absolute truth. The appearance of Father Ignatius is altogether in his favor, for while he is a highly emotional preacher, he has not at all the appearance of a fanatic.

Peculiar Amities of a Railway Passenger Girl

GEORGE MORTON, Gen'l Pass. Agt.
The Railroad

How May Lillian Sprague, Whose Face and Figure Were in Every Newspaper and Magazine, Gained More Notoriety Than She Expected.

THIS is an age of advertising publicity. The paper and the man with the most attractive advertisement attracts the most attention. To a great business truth, the man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive.

By Lillian Sprague, whose face and figure were in every newspaper and magazine, gained more notoriety than she expected. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive.

The secret in this little column of George Morton, General Passenger Agent, was revealed in the St. Louis case the other day when Edward J. Sprague, brother of Lillian, was arrested for a crime.

but in all of them this is the only one which was not a great deal of time. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive.

There are several "Katy Girl" posters. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive.

Mr. Sprague's complaint declares that the late Mrs. Morton was a woman of great beauty and figure. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive.

That this statement is accepted with more than one grain of salt by those who have met Mrs. Sprague and have made a collection of the posters. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive.

His Wife Told All and Decried Him. Upon the occasion of a quarrel between Mr. Sprague and his wife it is alleged that she lost all control of herself and defamed him in the presence of several persons. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive.

As he is her endeavor to get Morton to stop at home, the boy is a great deal of trouble. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive.

The Other Wife Is Silent. Mrs. Morton throughout has maintained a dignified silence. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive. The man who is the most attractive is the man who is the most attractive.

The Puzzle of MARY'S LITTLE LAMB

HOW DID IT FOLLOW HER TO SCHOOL?

by Sam Loyd.

Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Mary went
The lamb was sure to go.

It followed her to school one day,
and you all know the rest of the rhyme.
The puzzle is, how DID Mary's little lamb follow her to school?

Mary lived in the little house in the lower left hand corner of the diagram. You can see the school in the square adjoining the lower right hand corner. To reach the school Mary started from home and went once through every one of the sixteen squares in the diagram, ending at school. She did not enter any square more than once. And the lamb followed her all the way. Which way did the lamb go?

THE REAL STORY OF CHRISTMAS DAY

The True Story of Him Who Lived and Died to Save Others Will Interest a Child More Than the Santa Claus Myth, Which the Modern Matter-of-Fact World Tends to Destroy

THE arrival of Christmas has been preceded by the usual Santa Claus discussion. Should children be taught to believe in Santa Claus, or should they from their babyhood know the truth and give up the reindeer and the journey down the chimney?

Common sense can be variously construed. In our opinion the childish mind needs wonders to stimulate the imagination, and the Santa Claus story can do no harm.

This much is very certain. No man or woman should let Christmas Day go by without telling each child, in words suited to its years, the real story of Christmas.

The REAL story—the story that no scoffer or self-sufficient man can belittle—the historical story that MUST be accepted by every man, is so wonderful and so beautiful that nothing in fact or imagination can possibly equal it.

Nineteen hundred and four years ago, on this day, Christ was born. He was born among poor people. He lived among them all His days, chose His disciples among them, worked and taught to help them, and ultimately died for them.

Others who had come before Him, preaching religion, emphasized the duty of the poor, urging obedience and humbleness upon them, telling them that they must look up to their betters.

Jesus was interested in the poor, in those that suffered. His commands and His warnings were issued to the rich and the powerful that neglected the poor, deprived children of their rights, or dealt harshly with unhappy women.

The story of the birth of Jesus, of His childhood, of His constant thought for the poor and helpless, should be the feature of this day in every Christian family.

The story should be told to children with emphasis upon the wonderful kindness, gentleness and goodness of Jesus, and with as little emphasis as possible upon His dreadful death. The story of the Crucifixion is so terrible, so fearful an indictment on the entire human race, that its horrors are almost too great for childish ears to hear.

No grown man or woman should let this day go by without a thought of its meaning.

Every man should remember that this is the greatest day in the history of the world because it celebrates the birth of One who had no thought for Himself, but every thought for others.

The selfish man who justifies himself, the worthless man wasting his days and his years, will do well to review in his mind the ending of the life that began on this day nineteen hundred and four years ago.

Constantly protesting against injustice, constantly urging upon the rich and arrogant the rights of the poor, forever refusing to admit the necessity of false conditions, no matter how long established, Jesus' work led Him inevitably and clearly to His death. He was warned by His disciples and His followers, and they fell away from Him as they warned Him. At last two or three faithful women only of all that had followed Him were left to see Him die. Mocked at and taunted, He was taken to a hill outside the walls of Jerusalem—a bare, bleak hill, called Golgotha, which means "A skull."

It is well for those who profess themselves followers of Christ, who believe that they appreciate His character and His sufferings for humanity, to realize once a year the actual meaning of the Crucifixion—with its dreadful suffering voluntarily borne.

The crucifixion of men was not a Jewish custom. The Jews never crucified anybody. That was the Roman method of execution. And in Jerusalem, governed by Romans, crucifixions of criminals were of daily occurrence.

Jesus, whose life saved the world; whose life and death have been the inspiration of humanity for nineteen centuries, was condemned to die as an ordinary felon. Two criminals were crucified with Him.

There was pity, even in those days—and the women of Jerusalem used to give to men sentenced to be crucified a wine heavily drugged that would stupefy them and help take them through their sufferings. This Jesus refused to touch. To the end, His mind and His soul were clear. Fortunately, death ended His sufferings sooner than usually happened to those crucified.

It was not unusual for victims of this dreadful torture to live as long as three or four days upon the cross. The bleeding from the hands and the feet was not sufficient to cause death. Men nailed to the cross were even known to sleep and wake alternately through several days, dying ultimately of hunger and of internal disorders brought on by the position of the body.

In all the history of the ages, there is nothing that can compare to those hours on Golgotha. The vile creatures in the mob hurled execrations at Him, taunting Him with His inability to save Himself, after having saved others, defying Him to prove His divine origin and descend from the Cross.

Jesus, dying to save these men, looked down upon them with His mild, gentle eyes, and only said: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

The life that ended on the Cross and began on Christmas Day is the one example that shines out in all this world's history.

Every man who has given his life for others, every man who has given his work and his thought for others, has carried out feebly the example that was set nineteen hundred years ago.

It is well that the life and death of Jesus should be kept before men's mind, for His work is far from being finished.

The poor are still among us, injustice and greed are more powerful than benevolence.

There are thousands and tens of thousands of children that die of hunger and cold. There are thousands of others who are more to be pitied, that lead miserable lives of suffering, of crime and disgrace, because early opportunity was denied them.

The world has improved. It is improving, and ultimately it will prove worthy of the sacrifices that Christ made for men.

But it would be well if humanity would turn back oftener—not perfunctorily, but earnestly and reverently, to the life of Christ, whose birthday means happiness for the children and hope for humanity.

Give us a heart with love so fraught
For all created things
That even our least unspoken thought
Bears healing on its wings.

Give us religion that will cope
With life's colossal woes,
And turn a radiant face of hope
On troops of pigmy foes.

Give us the mastery of our fate
In thoughts so warm and white
They stamp upon the brows of ha
Love's glorious seal of light.

Give us the strong, courageous faith
That makes of pain a friend,
And calls the secret word of death
"Beginning," and not "end."

But the Russian Government has not enough strength of character to stick steadily to any one course, even a course of cruelty. After refusing and refusing. If the prisoners persist long enough in keeping up a protest, being noisy and making themselves a nuisance, the jailers will often end by saying: "Very well, the deuce take you; have the doctor if you must."

Our clothing was a chemise of coarse cloth, a skirt reaching to the ankles, no drawers, no stockings and a huge pair of coarse shoes. Each of us had also a gray dressing gown, with a yellow figure on the back, marking her as a convict.

We had plenty of clothes of our own, but they were stowed away in one of the stores.

The reason the peasants are so desperately poor is that they have not enough land to yield them a living. There are in Siberia immense tracts of good land not yet settled. Therefore, when the peasants could not raise enough to eat, much less to pay their arrears of taxes, many of them quietly slipped away without a passport and emigrated with their families to Siberia, where they settled down and began farming in comfort.

Interesting Discoveries Made Recently on the Moon

There is no evidence, produced by Professor Schaller, that the moon possesses any vegetation. Still, all astronomers are not agreed in accepting his conclusions. But the evidence is so strong that it is hardly worth arguing.

If the Hain really existed in the valley of the Imner Alps is really a river bed the stream that flows in it is a small, clear, sparkling stream, a remarkable spectacle. Its course is short, but probably steep, and where its valley meets the mountainside it is a most beautiful and almost shut off.

Here, even today, the telescope shows that the river is still in the process of being cut and grandest anything of the kind to be found on earth. The river made his way through a series of almost unexampled depth and narrowness.

The appearance of the coast indicates that the Hain is a very recent formation between the sea and the steep mountains. This is probably a result of the fact that the sea and there, is a sort of coast, overhanging with gale precipices and backed with peaks as lofty as the Alps. The Hain is a most picturesque sight of an ancient lunar city.

The inference that the new line is a river is a very reasonable one, and is supported by its location and environment, sets forth a very strong case. The fact that we know a considerable number of rivers on the earth, and that the moon, which is plainly depressions in the surface, has the same form as those which flowing water would produce.

Thus, gradually, the secrets of the earth's nearest companion are being revealed, and we are beginning to see the things that suggest a former resemblance to our earth. The resemblance need not go so far as absolute identity, but it is a very good thing to find in thinking of the moon, that it is a very different world, with its own, then these ancient topographical features, which are the oldest vestiges of a once-living world of men.

THOUSANDS HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE AND DON'T KNOW IT

Week and unhealed kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease, therefore, when through neglect or other causes, kidney trouble is permitted to continue, fatal results are sure to follow.

Other organs may be attended—but your kidneys must, because they do most and need attention first. If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, because as soon as your kidneys begin to get better they will help all the other organs to heal. A trial will convince anyone.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is for sale at drug stores the world over in bottles of two sizes and two prices—fifty cents and one dollar. Remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Elm Street, New York, is sure to send you this remedy free.

Money, Food and Clothing Are Distributed to the Hungry. The Gifts of Generous Men and Women of New England

SALVATION ARMY HAS LED IN GOOD WORK

Members Acted as Agents in Seeing that the Unfortunate Ones Are Remembered and Their Great Need Supplied

By Eleanor Ames.

Special to the Sunday American.
Fall River, Dec. 24.—After all Santa Claus did make a call at Fall River and the children of the poor were not disappointed. The gifts of generous men and women of New England were distributed to the hungry, the cold and the needy.

There are comparatively few homes in the city in which the poor are not remembered. The Salvation Army has been the most active in this work. Its members have been seen in every part of the city, distributing food, clothing and money to the needy.

"Come, Give, Give," was the cry of the Salvation Army members as they went from door to door, distributing food and clothing to the poor.

It was a joy to see the children of the poor, who had been so long without a Christmas, receive their gifts. The Salvation Army members were seen in every part of the city, distributing food, clothing and money to the needy.

Ensign Squarabriggs was busy all day, distributing food and clothing to the poor. He was seen in every part of the city, distributing food, clothing and money to the needy.

To The Editor Boston American

I desire to thank you and all of your staff for your hearty cooperation in behalf of the poor strikers of Fall River. As you came to our rescue without any warning, at our Frank and purely because you saw us struggling with a desperate problem in relieving the poor and destitute of our city.

Appreciating every kind word you have bestowed for us, I am yours for the poor of Fall River.

Ensign W. H. Squarabriggs.

P.S.—I am Fall River Letter Thanking Boston American for Assistance.

While his face was wreathed in smiles. The arrival of a contribution was an event of much moment to him. He was responsible for the Christmas gifts which were to be distributed to the children of the poor. He was seen in every part of the city, distributing food, clothing and money to the needy.

What Baskets Contained.
In each one there was some substantial piece of meat. In some a plump chicken, in others there was a roast of beef, or of pork or of mutton. There was a package of sugar, another of tea, and another of coffee and one of eggs. Some potatoes, turnips and onions, cranberries and cider and something to get two loaves of bread and a bucket, dairy cream.

It was something to give these children. The Salvation Army members were seen in every part of the city, distributing food, clothing and money to the needy.

ELIOT FROWNS ON ARBITRATION IN ALL LABOR CONFLICTS

BY CHARLES W. ELIOT, LL. D.,
President of Harvard University.

Written especially for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

What is called conciliation—that is, direct discussion between two parties to a controversy—often does great good.

On the other hand, it is also true that arbitration seldom results in anything but a compromise unsatisfactory to both parties.

One great evil of arbitration, to my mind, is that both parties to the controversy generally increase their demands in a ratio proportionate to what they believe will be stricken off.

I may state that, as a body, the Civic Federation has made it an ironclad policy to refuse to arbitrate any question between two parties. Federation Will Not Arbitrate.

The Civic Federation will not arbitrate the Fall River strike and a proposal to it to arbitrate cannot succeed, as the board will consistently refuse such a request.

It may be stated, however, that in some cases the Civic Federation considers it permissible for two or three of its members to act as a board of arbitration; but in so doing they act only as a board apart from and with no affiliation with the Federation. In no sense can such action be construed as an executive committee of the Civic Federation.

So far as my personal observation goes, I have yet to see when arbitration has successfully accomplished its purpose. In the case of the anthracite strike, a settlement was effected, but it was the people who eventually paid the costs of arbitration proceedings in a rise in the price of coal.

It would appear to me that in the case of the Fall River strike the operators made the wage cut because they felt that with cotton at so high a price they were unable to run their mills at a profit, save with the reduction in the wage scale.

Solution by Increased Demand.
I believe, therefore, that the solution of the Fall River situation will come when the manufacturers find it profitable to again open their mills through an increased demand for their products. At such a time the recent wage cut would probably be abrogated.

Members of the Civic Federation have been seen in New York both by members of the Fall River operatives and the mill owners, but what action they will take in the matter of acting as a board of arbitration will be a personal matter, and entirely removed from the jurisdiction of the Civic Federation.

NO CONCESSIONS BY MANUFACTURERS

Special to the Sunday American.
Fall River, Dec. 24.—The hope that Christmas would bring some concession of the mill owners to the strikers is now dead. The manufacturers will not make any concessions. These workers will be out of work for the next several months.

The union operators of Fall River are not the ultimatum of the manufacturers. The manufacturers are the ultimatum of the operators. The operators are the ultimatum of the manufacturers.
